Did you know?

Surprisingly the district name of Saltley has nothing to do with salt; instead the origin of its name is deeply rural and arises from two Old English words. The 'ley' element comes from 'leah', meaning a clearing probably in a woodland setting, whilst the 'salt' part derives from 'sealuht', denoting willows.

First recorded as Sautlega in a document from about 1170, the district's name was written down in a variety of ways thereafter. It was given as Salutlege in 1285 and Saluetley in 1320. Just two years later it was recorded as Salteleye and from the seventeenth century it was spelled as it was pronounced - Saltley.
